Binary Recognized for Successful Government and DoD Work

Women-Owned 8(a) Company Cites Growth in Federal Market as Reason for Awards

Bethesda, MD., October 24, 2006 — Binary Consulting Inc., a provider of strategic IT services to the Department of Defense (DoD), has been recognized by two leading industry organizations for its successful work and accomplishments in 2006.

The most recent recognition, Washington Technology's 2006 Fast 50 list, identifies successful small businesses that have "experienced phenomenal growth" in the government market space. Ranked No. eight on this year's Fast 50 list, Binary is gaining a strong reputation as the "go to" company for DoD IT transformation services.

"We fully appreciate our 8(a) status and the value it brings to our organization," said Rose Wang (wa-AH-ng), president and CEO of Binary. "Still, we are especially proud that 90 percent of our success to date has come from full and open competitions."

In August, Binary was also named to the prestigious Inc. 500 list of "the nation's fastest-growing privately held companies." A first-time recipient of the recognition, Binary took spot No. 114 on the full list, and earned fourth place on the list's roster of defense contractors.

Customers recognize the same quality that Inc. spotlighted when it chose Binary Consulting for the Inc. 500. According to Beverly Castleberry, chief of the Army CIO/G6 Knowledge Management Division, "Binary provides people that are the cream of the crop. I used to think it was only a few of the top-name companies that could provide high caliber staff, but Binary has changed my mind entirely."

"We do more than put butts in seats," says Wang. "We bring something different to the industry by creating a sense of belonging for our employees, which is then reflected in our commitment to customers."

Wang added that Binary plans to significantly expand its employee base during the next six months.
